

Bioclipse: a powerful Jmol application

Egon Willighagen

Published March 12, 2009

Citation

Willighagen, E. (2009, March 12). Bioclipse: a powerful Jmol application. Chem-bla-ics. <https://doi.org/10.59350/8ggrr-e4m33>

Keywords

Bioclipse, Jmol

Abstract

While Bioclipse is much more, it could be an interesting alternative to the Jmol application.

Copyright

Copyright © Egon Willighagen 2009. Distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License, which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original author and source are credited.

chem-bla-ics

While Bioclipse is much more, it could be an interesting alternative to the Jmol application. It offers:

- a scripting console
- a file browser (the Eclipse way)
- an outline of the file content which allows selections
- a script editor

The underlying RCP toolkit has many other interesting features for a Jmol application, but the above is up and running:

