Received a mail from Wendy Warr that the Journal of Chemical Information and Modeling now is 50th Anniversary old, and that they put up a special webpage:

Journal of Chemical Information and Modeling 50th Anniversary

In 2010, the Journal of Chemical and Information Modeling will celebrate its 50th anniversary. To observe this landmark, we have created an anniversary website, which will feature the 50 most-cited articles, most prolific authors, memorable Editorials and Perspectives, and biographies of editors (past and present).

The site will also include information on the 50th Anniversary JCIM symposium and reception, which will be held at the 240th ACS National Meeting & Exposition in Boston. This website will be updated as more details about the symposium, reception, and other anniversary events become available. Please visit the JCIM anniversary website throughout the year for the latest information and new content.

Congratulations to all current and past editors of the journal, and also all reviewers who helped the journal publish a lot of really good papers! I have been very happy to have been reviewing papers for the journal.

It's also very nice to see two friends from the next generation show up on the list of prolific authors: Andreas and Rajarshi. Of the older generation, I also notice Henry in that list. Congratulations to them too!
